Over 70 countries provide a fair way
for workers to form a union.

The United States
isn't one of them.

In order to form a union, U.S. workers endure an undemocratic election process that allows too many employers to run aggressive and intimidating anti-union campaigns prior to the vote. But across the globe, other nations' labor laws or practices allow workers to form unions and negotiate with employers, without navigating this adversarial process.*

America's Workers Shouldn't Have to Stand Alone

That's why we need the Employee Free Choice Act
