

‘The Game’ is On

The biggest financial crisis since the Great Depression continues to roil every aspect of our lives: from lost homes and millions unemployed to stolen pensions, crumbling infrastructure and vanishing opportunities for young workers.

Major corporations continue to enjoy huge tax breaks, while the impact of the recession falls most heavily on those who had the least to do with its cause. According to Vermont Independent Sen. Bernie Sanders, “It is morally wrong and very poor economics.”

A new video, titled ‘The Game,’ produced by the IAM and UCubed draws renewed attention to the crisis and calls on large corporations to pay their fair share of taxes on all forms of profit and income.

With dramatic images and audio, the poignant video gives viewers a taste of the outrage, anger and frustrations felt by American workers who wait for some measure of judgment on those responsible for the bald-face looting of the American economy.

“Wall Street robber barons have declared war on Americas workers,” intones the ad’s narrator. “The close our plants, ship our jobs overseas, steal our pensions, then laugh all the way to their banks, the banks that we bailed out.”

In conjunction with a campaign on Facebook, the ad calls for concrete changes to restore the balance that a just economy requires. “It’s time to make these tax dodging crooks pay their fair share on all their income and corporate profits,” says the ad. “It’s time Wall Street paid its taxes to fund a real American Jobs recovery.”
