INSTRUCTOR

The International Chemical Workers Union Council seeks applications for the position of Instructor at its Center for Worker Health and Safety Education, located in Cincinnati, Ohio. Instructors teach emergency response and hazardous waste classes in Cincinnati and at various national locations. Topics include use of personal protective equipment, rights and responsibilities, resources, hands-on spill response and other related topics to the membership of twelve participating organizations.

Minimum of three years' experience in adult labor education and knowledge of occupational health and safety are required. Applicants must have strong communication skills, particularly in working with labor and community organizations and outreach efforts to companies. Experience in chemical emergency response and/or hazardous waste worker education programs and work with the unions in our Consortium is preferred as is labor and community outreach experience and basic computer skills. At least two years prior experience within a multi union program as an instructor in these fields is required. Job duties also include conducting training in all Center programs both at the Cincinnati Center and nationally, participating in the development and updating of curriculum and other tasks. All Educational staff work a 35-hour week with travel and additional hours as needed. This position's weekly starting salary is $1,165.33 (paid biweekly) with a significant benefit package.

The Center is operated by the ICWUC in cooperation with eleven other major unions and organizations. The ICWUC is a national leader in worker health and safety and has successfully operated the Center under a number of NIEHS grants since 1988. All qualified individuals are encouraged to apply; the ICWUC encourages applications from women, people with fluency in Spanish and minority groups. The ICWUC is an equal opportunity employer.
